To Whom It May Concern::

I'm sending this correspondence in regards to the Indiana Telephone Privacy law and the challenge presented by The Consumer Bankers Association (CBA). I am in strict opposition of any amendment to the current law. Prior to the Indiana Telephone Privacy law coming into effect, I rarely answered my telephone at home in the evenings because it was such a burden and waste of valuable time. I'm a working mother of a four year old child and the evenings are the only time that I have to spend time with my family and communication with loved ones. Receiving several calls from strangers simply trying to sell me something, trying to talk me into changing a current plan I subscribe to, or any other matter, is a waste of time that I consider precious and valuable. If I desire a change to be made to a current subscription or if I'm interested in purchasing a particular product or service, I'm fully capable of making that telephone call myself. I don't require someone calling me, especially if it's an individual or company I currently have a business relationship with. If I already do business with someone, I know how to contact them if and when I need to.

I appreciate you taking my preferences into consideration. If you have any questions, I welcome your correspondence.

Regards,
